The Mosquito Hunt .-- A PARODY. Not a sound was heard, but a horrible hum, As around our chamber we hurried, In search of the insect, whose trumpet and drum Our delectable slumbers had worried.

We sought for it darkly at the dead of night, Our coverlid carefully turning,
By the struggling moonbeam's misty light,
And our candle dimly burning.

No useless garment confined our breast, But in simple night dress and slippers, We wandered about like spirits distressed, Or the sails of practical skippers. Short and few were the words we let fall. Lest the noise should disturb the mosquito, But we steadfastly gazed on the white-washed wall,

And thought how we had been bit, oh! We thought as we rose from our restless bed, And relinquished our pleasant pillow,
That we would not get in again, until he was dead,
And we were secured from his bill, oh!

But half an hour seemed to elapse, Ere we met with the wretch that had bit us, And raising our boot gave some terrible slaps, That made the mosquito's quietus. Quickly and gladly we turned from the dead, And left him all smashed and gory; We blew out the candle and popped into bed,

Determined to tell you the story.

We are indebted to the sprightly Washington Sta for the following amusing anecdote of Mike Walsh and McDonald, the newspaper carrier: Some years ago Mike visited Washington for the first time, where his fame had preceded him, and consequently he was well received by all who sought his acquaintance-all, we may say, but one. That one was poor McDonald, now no more, at that time a carrier of the Sun newspaper. He had heard much of found Mr. Walsh in one of the hotels. Mike was pointed out to him, but his size and appearance did not come up to Mac's notions of the man, and he swore it was not the simon pure.
